

On the Day of Visit to Research Institute

The respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the then Central Mushroom Institute under the State Academy of Sciences before its inauguration.

The institute looked untidy as equipment and furniture had just been installed in its main building and auxiliary buildings and finishing touches were being given, but he went round even the last room for mushroom cultivation.

After looking round the institute, he said that his visit paid off as he found that it would take ten days for the institute for its inauguration.

The officials could not understand his intention to postpone its inauguration.

Then, he looked round the outdoor resting place and fence, and said:

You have said that as the paving of the compound has already started, you will have it finished by today and ensure its inauguration tomorrow, but holding the ceremony is not so urgent. As building work has been completed, it is necessary to give the compound finishing touches and clean the institute in and out thoroughly for about ten days before holding the ceremony so that the researchers would have no need to give any touches to them after its inauguration.

Only then did the officials become aware of why he had suggested postponing the inauguration of the institute.

As a result, the inauguration ceremony was delayed.
