

Climbing a Mountain of the Country

The following happened one day in May 1940.

Kim Il Sung, Commander of the Korean People's Revolutionary Army, ordered his soldiers to have a picnic on a mountain as the weather was fine.

The soldiers cheered in excitement.

While climbing the mountain, Kim Il Sung called them to have a break, and sat on a flat rock. The soldiers sat around him. Fascinated by the beautiful landscape of the country, they were looking around their surroundings.

Kim Il Sung asked them about what they were thinking while climbing the mountain.

They could not answer.

Kim Il Sung said: Revolutionary must love their motherland wherever they go.

While feasting my eyes on the beautiful scenery of the motherland, I thought of building a paradise for the people on the liberated country. There are many trees growing on this mountain. If we exploit these resources by ourselves for the sake of people, they would surely lead a happy life.