

Masses' Spiritual Strength Is More Important

One June day in 2013, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the Pyongyang Condiments Factory.

As he was looking round the production line of vitamin E, the factory's official told him that they built it by themselves.

While feasting his eyes on the machines to appreciate their painstaking efforts, he said with pleasure that we could surely establish modern production lines with the machines made by our scientists and technicians.

After a while, he went to a workshop, where he spoke highly of the line of packing 50kg-container of bean paste made by the technicians and workers of the factory in cooperation with the researchers of Kim Chaek University of Technology.

That day, he stressed: What is fundamental is to give full rein to the spiritual strength of the producer masses. What is noteworthy in the Pyongyang Condiments Factory is that it modernized its production lines and established a cultured way of production and life, but more valuable is that it renovated itself by its own efforts by giving full play to the spiritual strength of the producers.

Listening to what he had said, the officials realized once again the iron truth that the driving force for creation lies in the spirit of believing in one's own strength, the revolutionary spirit of self-reliance.
