

On the Last Birthday of Great Revolutionary Career

President Kim Il Sung was very busy on April 15, 1994, when all the Korean people were celebrating his birthday.

At that time he was making efforts to provide the people with better living conditions. And he was busy meeting foreign figures from different countries and overseas Koreans, exerting himself too much even on his birthday.

Next day, an official earnestly asked him to take a rest.

He said the President had to worry less about the people's living conditions as they were leading a happy life without any worry thanks to his benevolence.

Appreciating his request, President Kim Il Sung expressed his will to work harder for the good of people.

Noting that endless is his loving care for the people, the official told him that Chairman Kim Jong Il was worried about his health as he overworked himself without considering his own health.

After looking out of the window for a while thinking about the loyal mind of the Chairman, the President said: I know that Chairman Kim Jong Il is concerned about my health. But I have to work hard as he is also working day and night worrying about the people's living.

Calming down the official, he continued: I understand your mind. But "The people are god" is my maxim. I will, in the future, too, devote myself for the good of the people, believing in them as in heaven, just as I have done so far.